

Overview of Git Submodules

What is a Git Submodule?

- A Git submodule is a reference to another Git repository within your repository. It allows you to include and track the history of an external repository.

Why Use Submodules?

- Modularity: Include external libraries or dependencies without copying their code.
- Version Control: Track and manage specific versions of the external repository.
- Isolation: Keep the external codebase separate and manageable.